Abstract

This study examined the current status of 53 public libraries in Palestine established by both the municipalities and NGO's, in order to find out the extent of the services provided by these libraries in the following areas: location, size, furniture, equipment, staff, users and resources. This study also aimed to identify the difficulties that hinder these libraries from performing their functions. The study used the survey method based on three questionnaires. The first one was sent to the director of each public library, while another survey was given to the clients and users of these libraries. The third survey was given to members of the general public who do not use libraries in order to gauge public awareness concerning libraries and to discern how to attract the public to come to libraries in order to find reading material. The researcher also visited some of these libraries to interview employees in order to identify the strengths and weaknesses of Palestinian public libraries. The results of this study will assist libraries to achieve a leading role in Palestinian society. This study was analyzed in collaboration with SPARK Consulting & Training Center.

Introduction:

Public libraries represent the values of liberal democracy, open access to knowledge, and equality. Recent challenges to public library service have opened an international dialogue about what the public library means as an institution in society. The author Neil Gaiman recently referred to the public library as a place that is about freedom: freedom to read, freedom of communication (Gaiman, 2013). Debates about whether public libraries are valuable repositories of knowledge and social values or outdated and unnecessary have shown how the public library inspires a passionate response and is valued (or denigrated) as an institution (Prewster,2014).

Public libraries are local centers of information; they provide channels of knowledge and information to users. In addition, they promote literacy and the pure enjoyment of reading and constitute a place where people go to get information, whether for leisure, for study, or for work.

Public libraries lie at the heart of their communities. They help to create a sense of belonging and respond to the needs of the people who use them. They celebrate cultural diversity, and they help promote understanding between different cultural groups. Public libraries provide opportunities for lifelong learning. They help children and young people develop imagination and creativity, and they give adults the opportunity to learn about their cultural heritage, and about the arts, science, and technology (Berryman,2005).

The primary purpose of establishing a public library is to provide resources and services in a variety of media to meet the requirements of individuals and groups for education, information, and personal development. Moreover, public libraries have an important role in the development and maintenance of a democratic society by giving the individual access to a wide and varied range of knowledge, ideas, and opinions.

Socially, the public library has an important role as a public space and meeting place. This is particularly important in communities where there are few places for people to meet. It is sometimes called “the drawing room of the community.”Using the library for research and for finding information relatedto the user's education and leisure interests brings people into informal contact with other members of the community. Using the public library can be a positive social experience.

Historical Background

It is undoubtablethat Palestine has a longlegacy in libraries, starting in 1826 during the Ottoman era. In this period, libraries promoted the dissemination of cultural and political works, as well as the works of Palestinian religious leaders.

In the early 1950s, libraries were neglected due to the Israeli occupation which forcedmany Palestinians to leave their cities and villages in the famous calamity. In fact a large spectrum of libraries werевandalizedor destroyedat the hands of Israelis; such as the Sheikh As'adShuqairiLibrary in Acre, and the well knownAl-KhaldyehLibrary in Jaffa. Capricious Israeli policies transferred the most valuable and ancient articlesto Israeli libraries by labeling themass “abandoned property”(Amit, 2008).

Family Libraries

Palestinian family libraries developed from the holdings of manuscripts and books which had been collected over many generations. These private collections were opened to the public, and they continued to be operated by members of the family

There are famous family libraries in Palestine such as the Budeiri Family Library, which went through a period of neglect, but since reopening with new management in 2003, the Budeiri family has been actively maintaining the collection, through preservation, acquisition, cataloging, and digitization initiatives. Also the Al-Khalidi Family Library was the most prominent family library in Palestine. The library holds the largest private collection of manuscripts in Jerusalem (Bergan,2002).Another family library is

The Iss'af Nashashibi Center for Culture and Literature which aims to be a resource for scholars throughout Palestine. (Ghanem,2002).

Political Background:

Many Palestinian libraries were robbed and destroyed by occupation gangs in 1948; and as a result, many public and private libraries have disappeared and are no longer open. Other libraries were captured and the best books belonging to these libraries were transferred to Israeli libraries. In brief, these libraries were destroyed and robbed in 1948: the Al-Khaldyeh Library in Jaffa, which was owned by a person called Al-Haj Raghib Al-Khalidi; the Darwish Aref al-Dabbagh Library in Jaffa, which had nearly thirty thousand volumes, including is the works of his brother, the poet Ibrahim al-Dabbagh; the Ajaj Noueihed Library, in Jerusalem; the Khalil Beidas Library, the Adil Jabr Library, and the Khalil Sakakini Library were robbed and transferred to the Hebrew University Library, as well as the Isaac Musa Hussein Library, which included nearly 4,000 books and manuscripts; the Mohammed Iss'af Nashashibi Library, in Jerusalem; the Sheikh Mohammed bin Mohammed al-Khalili Library, which contained 7,000 books and manuscripts at that time; the Assad Al-Shoqairee library in Acre, which contained a lot of rare Arabic books; in addition to other libraries (Badil,2016).

After the occupation by the Israeli forces in 1967, both private university libraries and public libraries faced confiscation and closure throughout the West Bank, Gaza Strip, and East Jerusalem. Occupation began during this time to fight Palestinian libraries by preventing the sale of books and the importation of books from abroad.

Public Libraries under the Palestinian Jurisdiction

Public libraries remarkably improved during the period from 1995 to 2000. Politicians had placed public libraries at the top of the list of essential items to be taken care of, while at the same time many non-governmental libraries were being established. This prosperity no longer existed after the beginning of the Second Intifada. Israeli military forces invaded the West Bank cities and robbed and closed some libraries, such as the Ramallah Municipality Library and the Palestinian Legislative Council (PLC) Library. In Gaza, the situation is much worse after three wars in 2009, 2012, and 2014. The destruction was indescribable, and many libraries have either been closed or destroyed. The Al-Maparrah Library is an illustrative example of Israeli brutality against public libraries.

According to the periodic report published by "PCBS": The Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics in 2010 (PCBS,2010), the number of active public libraries in Palestine is 65,52 of which are located in the West Bank. The other 13 libraries are in the Gaza Strip. The majority are small libraries run by NGO's and international associations. None of these small libraries meet the international standards of the International Federation of Library Association (IFLA) or the standards of the Egyptian public libraries.

Importance of the Study

This study derives its importance from the role played by public libraries in the Palestinian community in the following aspects:

1. According to my knowledge, this is the third study on this subject and the first one in the English Language in the twenty-first century. The study sought to identify the current reality of public libraries in Palestine in terms of their location, spaces and equipment, client and users, staff and services provided by employees in these libraries as well as the difficulties that prevent them from carrying out their duties.
2. This study provides accurate and current information to decision-makers about the status of public libraries in Palestine to assist them in planning the future development of these libraries.
3. This study identifies the role of public libraries in the Palestinian society.
4. This study determines whether these libraries achieve their goals or not.

Limitation of the Study

- The Study covers 24 public libraries in Palestine run and supported by 29 public libraries run by NGO's.
- This study was conducted by Hani Jaber in cooperation with SPARK Consulting & Training Center in Nablus, Palestine, in August 2016.

Research Questions

The importance of this study lies in determining the availability of public libraries in Palestine and the role played in Palestinian society

1. Does the public libraries' infrastructure enable them to achieve their goals?
2. What is the current status of Palestinian public libraries, in terms of geographical distribution, availability of material, human resources, and services.
3. What reading material do they contain, and what technical procedures do they follow?
4. What services do the libraries provide, and what ages do they serve?
5. What role do public libraries play in cultural, social, and educational activities in Palestinian society, and what are their impact on societal development?

6. What difficulties do these libraries face in accomplishing their objectives?

Definitions:

- PCBS: The Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics.
- Library Collections: Various types of reading material, including traditional and electronic materials, such as books, periodicals, reference works, and other e-materials available in the library.
- Professional Librarian: A librarian who works in a library and graduated with a degree in library science.
- IFLA: International Federation of Libraries Association.
- NGO's: Non-governmental organizations (NGO's) are not-for-profit organizations, independent from states and international governmental organizations. They are usually funded by donations, but some avoid formal funding altogether and are run primarily by volunteers.
- Family Library: A family library is a private collection which is purchased and maintained by a family in their residence.
- Databases: A data base is a collection of information which is organized so that it can easily be accessed, managed, and updated. Databases can be classified according to types of content: bibliographic, full-text, numeric, and images. Usually this term is used for e-Journals, e-Books, and other e-Resources in the library world.
- Library Collection: Developing and building print and other analogue library materials, through purchases, exchanges, gifts, and legal deposits, including e-resources.

Methodology

The general methodology used by the study:

A survey scheme, using different phases of implementation, including interviews, was used to achieve the objectives and deliver the outcomes of this study.

The survey team conducted field-visits of fifty-three libraries in different regions of the West Bank and Gaza Strip within the period from February to March 2016. The following table shows the surveyed libraries in both the West Bank and Gaza Strip:

Study Instruments

To accomplish the goals of this study, the following instruments were used:

Three questionnaires were developed for this study to collect data about the public libraries in Palestine. The first questionnaire was prepared for users of library services. The second questionnaire was created for the directors of the public libraries in Palestine in order to discover the strengths and weaknesses of their services, staff, building, and collections. The final questionnaire was given to the public at large to see how much Palestinian society is interested in libraries and their activities. In order to establish the validity of this questionnaire, three researchers reviewed the proposed questionnaires. They modified 5 items and added 2 items to the first questionnaire, and they dropped 1 item and added 2 to the second questionnaire.

All the questionnaires were written in the Arabic language.

Survey Tool

The questionnaire was divided into three main categories: library needs assessment survey, library user survey, and non-user survey.

A. Library Needs Assessment Survey:

The questionnaire in this category was designed to assess the requirements and needs of the targeted libraries and to build a robust and comprehensive database of public libraries in Palestine. Fifty-three libraries were surveyed and assessed according to the following categories:

1. General information about the library.
2. The current infrastructure and the administrative status.
3. The administrative processes.
4. The number of users utilizing the public library.
5. Accessibility of the location and information.
6. Library resources.
7. Recent library programs and activities.

B. Library User Perception Survey:

This questionnaire measured the level of satisfaction of library users with the services provided by the public libraries, including the following items:

1. General information about the user.
2. The frequency of visiting.
3. Physical accessibility.
4. Sources of information.
5. The main reasons for visiting the public library.
6. Availability of information.
7. Library Working Hours.
8. Amenities.
9. Other facilities (chairs, shelves, etc.).
10. The quality of advisory services.

C. Non-User Survey

To measure the perception of public library non-users, a questionnaire was disseminated and thirty respondents answered whether they were considered as users or non-users of the public library. The items of the questionnaire have been presented as follows:

1. General information of the respondent.
2. The possibility of utilizing public library resources.

3. The reasons why the non-users do not use the public library resources.
4. Suggestions and recommendations to motivate people to regularly visit public libraries.

Results and Analysis

The results are categorized to cover the results of the public libraries' assessment and public library user and non-users.

Public Libraries' Buildings

The study shows that the majority of Palestinian Public Libraries' (PPL's) buildings are owned by municipalities, whereas 19% of them are rented as shown in Figure 1:

However, only 17% of the public libraries have an independent building. This would affect plans for future expansion of libraries, since most of these buildings are not designed as libraries. This would also prevent the addition of new sections, departments, or spaces. Most of the libraries are located near the downtown, easy to access and with facilities for special needs.

Moreover, the spaces in the Palestinian public libraries do not match the international standards in terms of the number of users of these libraries.

Organization Structure

The organization structure of public libraries in Palestine suffers from issues which cannot be overlooked. About 50% of PPL's have neither organization structure nor job descriptions for staff. Hence, this leads to inefficiency in providing services for users. In addition, the conflicts between the staff and the management are noticeable due to unclear responsibilities.

The following figures show the status of both organization structures and job descriptions of the public libraries in Palestine:

The following figures show the status of both; the organization structure and the job description of the public libraries in Palestine:

Library Departments and Sections

While most PPL's have circulation, cataloging and acquisition, and reference departments, most of them lack departments for children's services, IT, and archiving. The small number of staff and the lack of qualified employees in the libraries prevent the establishment of such departments.

Furthermore, a lack of promotion campaigns aimed towards children play a major role in this gap, as shown in the following figure:

The IT departments in the public libraries are either not existent or do not have up-to-date technological equipment. This is because of the constraints placed on the budget by the municipalities. Although some PPL's have an automated system, these systems often lack many vital functions, such as circulation, acquisition, and cataloging.

Indeed, only 30% of libraries have a computerized server in order to run the electronic services. In addition to that, even though 75% of libraries have internet services, only 5% of them have IT departments. This affects the quality of IT services provided by the library for both internal and external customers. What makes the situation worse; around 90% of libraries do not subscribe to updated regional or worldwide electronic databases, as shown in the following:

Figure:4

The vast majority of libraries utilize the DDC and LC classification systems. However, 20% of libraries depend on unknown classification systems. This indicates that most PPL's rely on international classification systems; DDC or LCLD, as using these systems provides a systematic way to smoothly organize the reading material being used and circulated. These systems also can be used to identify deficiencies and weaknesses in the library's holdings.

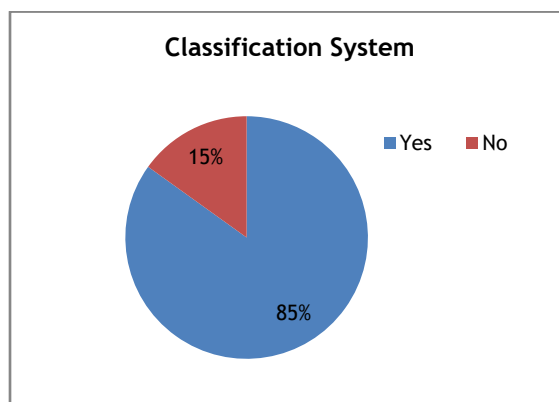

Figure:5

Unfortunately, 15% of the public libraries depends on a local classification system. This will lead to chaos in organizing the library collection process and cooperation with partners.

Reading Material

The study shows that the majority of Palestinian public libraries show the minimal endeavors in providing the traditional services of provision of circulation, references, and book services. Simultaneously they do not have electronic resources to provide.

The audiovisual resources in the libraries are very few, due to the advent of modern technology and the use of the internet and electronic resources.

The statistics show that the availability of Braille books in these libraries is not sufficient. This is mainly because of the tendency to ignore blind readers or the inability to provide adequate literature written in Braille.

- The study shows that 21% of PPL's offer special facilities for special needs in their libraries, while the majority of them don't offer any type of access or services for those users. Also, the study shows that 32% of the public libraries in Palestine provide services for special needs.

Decision Making

The study shows that the majority of decisions emerge from the librarian: this indicates that the participation of the librarians in the decision-making process helps to share the responsibility and strengthens the governance principles in the institution.

On the other hand, many decisions come from the municipality administration outside the library; which leads to failure in taking the appropriate decisions and makes the library face serious issues with inability to continue its activities and services, especially in the context of competition.

The following table illustrates the top eight scoring libraries that have been calculated according to the weight and the available standards scale of percentage 100% according to location, size, furniture, equipment, staff, users, resources, activities, Internet and electronic service.

Recommendations

1. Location, Building, and Equipment

- The public library buildings and spaces don't meet international standards and are not sufficient for client services and activities. Spaces must be planned in public library buildings according to the standards and sufficient for the anticipated number of users.
- Library furniture and equipment must be provided according to international standards in order to improve the quality of services.

2. Staff

- Professional and qualified librarians must be hired to meet the needs of each library according to the international standards.
- Professionals and non-professionals librarians must be provided with training workshops for the library staff, which develop their skills in the profession and the library services.

3. Library Collections

- Libraries must build traditional and non-traditional information and source collections in public libraries to meet the user's needs.
- Libraries should balance their collections and fill the deficiencies in their collections.
- They should subscribe to a number of periodicals.
- They should offer different services and sources for all ages and cultures, especially for children, youth, the elderly, and those with special needs.
- They should take into consideration the changing needs of the users of public libraries in regards to modern technology, online and electronic resources, and databases.
- The public library buildings and spaces have to be reconsidered in a way that allows the growth of services and activities according to the availability of the number of users.
